ETOR ANSTAND DENIES W.W. IS FRAUDULENCE

LAWRENCE Feb. 20.—Joseph J. Etor, the strike leader, declared on the witness stand today in his own defense that the Industrial Workers of the World were not guilty of violence in the conduct of a strike. He said that the word "force" was used in its most peaceful sense.

He was cross-examined by District Attorney Atwell.

Q.—Do you recall anything in solidarity (the English organ of the I. W. W.) which would lead you to believe that the World believes in the proper method of conducting the strike? A.—It is all about what the strike is. I do not say that I do not remember. I do not know what the strike is.

Q.—Does the I. W. W. control this newspaper? A.—It is responsible only for its editorial policy. None of the members contribute and they are responsible for their own contributions.

Q.—Do you know a contributor to Solidarity who signed the letters "J. E."? A.—That is not me.

Q.—Do you know who it is? A.—I have no idea.

Q.—Do you know who the contributor is? A.—I believe I do, but I can't say positively.

Meaning of Force.

Q.—Do you recall an article in last paper which will one of the purposes of the I. W. W. was to call for direct action which excludes everything from passive resistance up to every kind of force necessary? A.—How do I know unless you show me the article.

Q.—I say from passive resistance in a strike up to any force necessary to secure the aim desired by the I. W. W. A.—It all depends on what interpretation you give to the word "force." There is the force of unity, the force of solidarity and the force of withholding labor from the strike. But that does not exclude violence.

Q.—Does the I. W. W. in conducting a strike, believe in any form of violence? A.—No.

Q.—Anything that is simply peaceful? A.—We believe in the unity of labor.

Weight for Producers.

Q.—Why do you belong to the I. W. W.? A.—Because it answers to my aspirations.

Q.—After a long examination of the witness concerning the money paid to the newspaper by the strikers here, District Attorney Atwell asked:

Q.—Did the central organization contribute one cent to the strike committee? A.—No, sir.

Q.—What does the I. W. W. stand for in your opinion? A.—We believe that labor produces all the wealth and that wealth is entitled to be divided among the workers.

Q.—You believe that everybody, all workers, should join the I. W. W. and that it should embrace every given in demand? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Does it include brain workers? A.—I don't know about that.

Q.—What profession is that that can get into the I. W. W. or who is it that can get in? A.—I don't know.

Q.—Those who do not use their hands or brains are discarded and they are entitled to the wealth that they produce? A.—No, sir.

His Revenue All His Own.

Q.—How do you believe in the distribution of wealth? A.—That is a question that is not for me to answer.

Q.—You say that you have not worked at your trade for four years? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—How is it that you are able to live without working these four years? A.—Oh, I receive some money.

Q.—I said you were able to live without working these four years in this work, four years delivering lectures on the purposes of the I. W. W.?

Q.—And you have never indicated the manner and means as to how the money is obtained?

"COME TO ME DEAREST, AND BRING THE MONEY," WROTE SHAW TO MRS. STUART FROM THE WEST

This is A. W. Shaw's letter, received today from California. It is the first letter showing Shaw's plans for flight. The letter published exclusively in the AMERICAN yesterday Shaw intended as a blind to cover his tracks in his flight in California.

No. 1303 Figueroa Street, Los Angeles, Cal.

My Own Dear Sweetheart:

I am just home from the City Beautiful, Pasadena. Anabel Shaw was there seven years ago and tried to describe it, but the only saying that I remember was the City Beautiful. It is a great Winter resort under the foothills—never any frost, and the hotels are crowded at from $5 to $10 a day.

I went into the Pasadena, the Maryland, and got dinner at the Panama, 50 cents, seven courses, with wine—look cars at the orange groves, went under the trees loaded with oranges and lemons plenty on the ground. One tree at a time has orange blossoms—small buds, small just commencing to grow, large green ones and fully ripe at the same time. You pick today and every week from October to April.

Ye gods, I never saw such streets, such beautiful houses, such comfort in all my life. I saw one place for sale, $700. I wish you could see it—small, 5 rooms, but perfect. I went over the house. Man dead, widow wants to go to the seashore.

I would not buy it, because all my money is with you, or I would have bought it on the spot. Another grand place, $1,200, can be rented for $50 a month, $800 a year, and pay for itself in two years. Just think of it!

I have got it all arranged now, and I think you will agree.

PLAN ALL ARRANGED FOR THE FUTURE.

First. We will buy two income properties—rent one, rent rooms in the other, have an income of $150 a month, no rent to pay.

Second. Set up a real estate office, hire one stenographer. You and I can sell $100,000 of property in one year at 15 per cent, which equals $15,000.

Third. We must have and own an automobile to take our customers to see the property.

Fourth. After established, say two or three years, we will hire one smart young fellow to run the office and give him 5 per cent. (the price agent get), and we will start round the world. It is a dream, but will come true. I. A. Hollingsworth of this city is running the largest real estate office here. He started ten years ago without a cent as an agent at 5 per cent. Today he is worth $300,000.

Director in the Los Angeles Trust Company, he hardly goes near his real estate office. I had a long talk with him last week. He has ten agents at work on 5 per cent. He gets 10 per cent, and they sell $2,000,000 real estate a year. He has no more ability than I have. I am good for twenty years yet and I will make enough to pay up all my creditors dollar for dollar, with the start we will have and with you to cuddle me.

When you get this you will have received my letter of yesterday to Mrs. —, and I shall write in more, because you will be on your way to me with the money and B. Don't leave any behind, not a cent, except a small balance in B. C.

Be sure you telegraph me night rate before you start. I shall not go to San Diego, and if you have sent mail there I will have it forwarded. Write here, to A. S. W.

Soon as you start I shall move and change my name to Geo. M. S. But will get Willis mail and the telegrams here.

I shall keep quiet until I know you have started. Talk about waiting until September! I would not do it for a million dollars. I could not do it. I must be with you, or, or, or—God only knows what I would do. I don't. So, dearest, you must come. In reading over your letter you say "Get out of Los Angeles." Why? You say you have money enough to last you a year. Why did you say that? Did you expect I would be incarcerated? Why be afraid? I only came here to obliterate my other ties.

This climate is death on a big stomach. My waist measure has gone down one-half and still going. In six months I will have no pod. I feel fine physically. My face is red; all Californians have florid faces. Ladies have natural red cheeks. It is the air.

TOLD HER WHERE TO HIDE VALUABLES.

This morning at the restaurant I had two oranges, two soft boiled eggs, rolls and coffee for 20 cents. Living is very cheap. Eggs fresh, 20 cents, butter 20 cents. Meat one-half what it is in Boston. At a table next to mine sat two Germans from Chicago and their wives. I heard their conversation. They came here in December. They bought a piece of real estate as an investment. They sold it yesterday and cleaned up $1,000. What about that? They joked one another and all

The AMERICAN today found A. W. Shaw, the Maine shoe manufacturer, in Los Angeles, Cal. He is living under the name of A. S. Willis at No. 1503 Figueroa street, one of the prominent residential streets of this city.

This information, which the AMERICAN obtained exclusively, was today given to the police authorities of Boston. They immediately took action and before night the missing man will probably be under arrest. Not only has this newspaper found Shaw, but it is able to lay before its readers the whole story of his disappearance and his plans for the future in company with the wife of the man who was arrested as his roughneck yesterday and today was strangled in the Montpelier Courthouse.

Mrs. Stuart, dressed entirely in black, and so protected with a black cloak that no one could get a look at her face, was brought into the court at 12:42. She was accompanied by Mrs. Bennett, the mother. They sat down in a part of the room where they could not be seen by the spectators. They remained there for about fifteen minutes.

During this time Judge Joseph W. Scullin and his assistant, Paul Murray Lewis, remained in the interest of Mrs. Stuart's Inspector Gifford and Clerk John Barry consulted at the bench. They were discussing the nature of the charge and the nature of bail.

Held in $2,000 Bail.

It was 1:05 when Mrs. Stuart was motioned to step up to the bench. Judge Gifford presided. Mrs. Stuart did not raise her head. Clerk Barry announced that she had been held in $2,000 bail for a hearing on February 27. Mrs. Stuart did not speak a word in court. She stood at the bar with a silent, thin smile was taken away.

Mrs. Stuart was taken to the detention room. Her attorneys had announced to the reporters that she would be able to get bail before night. They also said that the bail had been reduced from $10,000 to $2,000.

The story of Shaw's domestic duplicity (he has a wife and children at Freeport, Me.) his financial dishonesty, his attempt to disappear as a dead man and his plan to re-emerge with the Boston roughneck whom he loved, is one of the most remarkable romances in real life that was ever started.

It was to be a book of dreams. But Shaw only got two or three of the opening chapters written when his imagination received a rude shock.

A Dead Letter.

Barely twenty days have passed since Shaw disappeared, having written that he proposed to "read and see" his life in the sea from the deck of an ocean liner. The letters rather pathetic. But to those who knew Shaw it seemed out of tune. The AMERICAN yesterday published a statement letter which was another of those false attempts of a man whose name was mentioned in the original facts to evade the demands of justice.

In his letter, which the AMERICAN prints in full today, Shaw alludes to the Savannah letter and thus establishes the authenticity—this in spite of the fact that other Boston newspapers printed stories to show that it could not have been true.

Shaw's letter, written from the orange-colored, sun-baked section of Southern California, is a sort of vision of what his life was to be in the future. In one of his extant letters, he declared to Mrs. Stuart:

"My Own Dear Sweetheart."

"I am not for a moment going to pay you. The letter was written February 14 and mailed the next day. It reached here early today. It was addressed to Mrs. Stuart and it opened with this affectionate greeting:

"My Own Dear Sweetheart:

Shaw had been in Pasadena, and he was overjoyed with the beauty of the city. As many another visitor has been. He wrote with the imagination of a good real estate man, his words of enticement that he visited and what they cost. He was on the verge of falling in love. He said:

"All my money is with you."

Planned a World Tour.

Then he outlined his plans for his future with Mrs. Stuart. It was done clearly, succinctly. He made two chief points:

First, he said he would buy two fine new properties—each about five acres and live in the other and rent rooms.

Second, he would send in real estate.

Desperate Desmond

Heroic Claude Eclipse Falls Into the Hands of the Justly Dreaded Manchu Cavalry

Copyright, 1912, by the National News Association

By Hershfield

Desperate Desmond, the international rook, finds himself in a precarious position on the moon top secure roof of a pagoda, which is surrounded by Chinese revolutionaries. As Desmond is known to be an imperialist he will get no mercy from the rebels below. Claude, seeing that the villain cannot escape, enters the pagoda in the hope of finding his beloved Rosamond, who has been spirited away and concealed.

In the pagoda the first thing that strikes Claude's eye is the great statue of Buddha, and as there is little else to be seen he concludes that his Rosamond must be hidden there. A little investigation discloses a door. In the secret room Claude quickly finds his sweetheart in the arms of a Chinese. To keep her safe with the rebels, Desmond is convinced he locks Rosamond up again in the statue and goes forth to aid the revolutionaries.

In the meantime Desmond has not been idle. Knowing well his danger from the excited followers of the republican standard, he looks about for a way of fleeing. He realizes the only way is to escape through the pagoda. He plans to make a leap from the top of the pagoda, and the plan of escape will make the going pretty hard for the rebel supporters of the republican cause.

The Chinese who are fighting for the overthrow of the Manchu despotism are many of them insufficiently equipped. So when Desmond is perched try to reach the building they do some around and left standing as their bare feet come down on the broken glass. The villain laughs at the fooling of his enemies, but the rest of a pagoda among hostile Chinese is no resting place.

In the distance the sound of the breaking glass comes to the ears of a troop of Manchu cavalry. These mercenaries of the imperial government decide that revolutionaries are destroying property and set out at full speed for the pagoda, on the top of which Desmond is waiting for the villainous sparrow. They are a ruthless lot, these cavalrymen, and was to the republicans they capture.

"I'm a plitty sick Nollan man!" cries Desperate Desmond, as he and the imperialists move away with the captive Claude, who will be doomed to some terrible fate for his sympathy with the revolutionaries. The Manchus have also taken the statue of Buddha in which, as is shown in this, Rosamond is hidden. It is another triumph for Desmond and the rebels, and Rosamond will be shown tomorrow.
